BAD MILK AND MEAT.

Due to Disease of the Animals from which they Come.

THE DANGERS OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Importance of Guaranteeing to the Public a Pure Food Supply—A Rigid Inspection Should be Made. The Duty of the City Council in the Matter Plain, and it Should Act.

Many physicians and persons who are in a position to know of their own personal knowledge have expressed themselves as indorsing all the INTELLIGENCER said last week on tuberculosis among cattle, and the necessity of a food, especially milk and meat, inspector in the city. The subject is one of vast importance to the public and the agitation of the matter should be continued until a system of inspection of the food supply is obtained.

A reporter had a long talk with Dr. L. N. Reeder yesterday, and in the course of the conversation he said:

"The immense demand for animal food by all classes of society is, perhaps, in no country in the world greater than in our own. When we take into consideration the numerous diseases which are transmissible to man from the lower animals, and especially the prevalence of tuberculosis, for which our country has gained an unenviable notoriety, it is not too much to assert that the subject of diseased meat and milk should stand prominent as a matter of public concern."

"Happiness as well as health is considered to be insured or imperiled by a good or improper diet, and high moral considerations are supposed to be involved in the due performance of digestion. If there is some exaggeration in this, there is much truth, and doubtless of all the agencies which affect nutrition this is the most important."

"What action would you suggest to protect the public?" he was asked.

"From the numerous opinions I have been requested to give on diseased meat and milk, at each examination I am more and more convinced of the necessity of a rigid system of inspection. A newspaper report now and then gives to the outside public a meager idea of the amount of trade in diseased food which is carried on. As the disputed cases have generally been those of lung disease, I will speak of those in particular. Pleuro-pneumonia, from which American cattle have suffered greatly in the past few years, has by strict quarantine laws and by the aid of good inspectors, been almost entirely eradicated. But tuberculosis, as dread a disease, and worse in its effects, is more prevalent at the present day than ever before."

"What should be done with diseased cattle?"

"The tuberculous beast is hereditarily diseased so that its system has been contaminated throughout life. In all instances the flesh should be destroyed so far as its sale for human food is concerned. A butcher once observed to me that he could pool these so-called tubercles off like marbles, and that no one, himself excepted, would be the wiser. Doubtless ignorant persons might be thus deceived, but the scientific inspector would at once detect that the carcass had been tampered with."

"Cattle thus affected are frequently in good condition, so far as appearance goes. But can this be a healthy condition when the lungs, the organs in which the blood becomes purified, are filled with these tubercles? We must bear in mind however fat and beef like the carcass looks, scrofulous blood has been circulating throughout the system of the animal, and therefore, if used for food, however unpleasant the statement may be, the consumers are eating scrofulous, tuberculous, blood poisoned meat, or drinking milk just as bad and dangerous."

"The flesh of the ox is consumed as food, and it is essential that it should be in as healthy a state as possible, though the process of cooking might be relied on to some extent to annul any pernicious properties it might have acquired through the animal having been in a diseased condition during life. Far otherwise is it with the milk derived from the cow. This seldom undergoes any process which would be likely to destroy whatever injurious qualities it might chance to be tainted with. Through the insensate state of the animal which yielded it, and when we reflect that milk enters largely into the diet of young people, the question of acquiring disease in this way, and especially such a malady as tuberculosis, becomes one of the greatest moment. Even if the milk does not possess the dangerous infective properties, its denegacy in nitrogenous elements, fat and sugar, and the increased proportion of earthy salts, would alone render it objectionable as an article of food."

"There is no aspect of the subject of tuberculosis that is not important. As the disease is in no small degree transmitted by the milk and flesh of cattle, any means that facilitates its detection in and eradication from the source of food supply must command earnest attention. It is a well known fact that considerable per centage of cattle is more or less affected with tuberculosis. It is also well known that tuberculosis may be transmitted to man by the consumption of milk and flesh of cattle suffering from the disease. The course to pursue under the circumstances is a plain one. The city council has a clear and responsible duty to perform. The conservation of the public health is paramount to all other considerations. Let the city council authorize the rigid inspection of all milk and meat offered for sale in the city. Not a happy-go-lucky examination, but one conducted by a scientific expert versed in the best methods of detection."

"The Lurking Enemy." The picture by this title that has been on exhibition at Gundling's clothing store was painted by J. A. Faris. It is one of a series of subjects in natural history that Mr. Faris contemplates painting as a result of nearly half a life time of study of the habits of the birds and animals of the American forests. Many a wonderful story can be told on canvas of the happenings in the woods, and this one is very pleasingly portrayed.

"What's in a name?" Well, that depends. For instance, the name of "Ayer's" is sufficient guarantee that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a genuine, scientific blood-purifier, and not a sham, like so much that goes by the name of "Sarsaparilla." Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the standard.

TROUBLE IN THE KICKAPOOS

Over the Succession to Chief Gold Dust, Who Recently Resigned.

It has been some time since that the Kickapoos had as enjoyable a meeting as they did last Saturday night. All the old braves were present, and many beads were put in circulation. The most important matter before the council fire was the question of a successor to Chief Gold Dust, who recently resigned to enter another reservation. Many bucks were in favor of Much Tonnage, while an equal number were favorable to Rain-in-the-Face. The supreme moment of the confabulation occurred when Rain-in-the-Face offered to buy the chieftainship for ninety cents, which was equivalent to instituting a new school of politics in the tribe. The subject was finally settled by appointing a runner who started last night to visit Big Chief Say Nothing, in Washington city, and it is supposed that the great official of the tribe will settle the matter in about ten days. Meanwhile the "petrified woman" will direct the affairs of the Kickapoos in this city.

When the runner returns from Say Nothing's camp he will hold a special meeting of the tribe, and he will be expected to have a large mouthful of talk which he will distribute around the wigwam. If this does not settle the matter a committee will be selected to interview Colonel Coxey, who will switch off his army from the route laid out to pause long enough to hear the complaint.

In the interim it is not definitely known whether the tribe as a whole is in favor of the Wilson free trade measure or a pure food and meat inspection bill. The last work of the tribe was to pass a resolution prohibiting white hand-painted Indians from acting as cigar signs, or otherwise misbehaving themselves.

HELD ON TO LIFE.

Six Pistol Balls to Lay Out One Mule at the Crematory.

Yesterday morning William Clemmons, a teamster, of Centre Wheeling, took a sick mule, his property, to the crematory to kill the animal. The animal was led into the crematory room and a pistol bullet fired into its head. Instead of falling dead, as the spectators supposed it would, the mule jumped upon the furnace grating and had to be pulled down. Another shot was put into the head of the mule, but it still held tenaciously to life. The third, fourth and fifth shots also seemed to have no effect, but the sixth reached a vital spot, and the mule sank to the floor dead.

Persons afflicted with chilblains, so troublesome to many, will find a pleasant and permanent cure in Salvation Oil. 25c.
